ALAI 2007 – Punta del Este

The exclusive right to make available to the public

Jacqueline Seignette

© 2007 J.M.B. Seignette, Amsterdam, Netherlands

seignette@hocker.nl

General report on the right of making available will be made available on the ALAI website and published in the ALAI 2007 book.

what does it mean?

Article 8 WCT:

Without prejudice to the provisions of Articles 11(1)(ii), 11bis(1)(i) and (ii), 11ter(1)(ii), 14(1)(ii) and 14bis(1) of the Berne Convention, authors of literary and artistic works shall enjoy the exclusive right of authorizing any communication to the public of their works, by wire or wireless means, including the making available to the public of their works in such a way that members of the public may access these works from a place and at a time individually chosen by them.

Agreed Statements concerning Article 8:

It is understood that the mere provision of physical facilities for enabling or making a communication does not in itself amount to communication within the meaning of this Treaty or the Berne Convention (...).

two different approaches:

- technical
- functional

technical interpretation:

physically having the work available on one's computer ready to be transmitted upon demand by a member of the public

functional interpretation:

- organizing, controlling and offering a service by which the work is made available and transmitted to members of the public on demand
- the technology behind the service is not determinative

an example:

P2P networks

P2P bit torrent technology

- website with links to torrent files
- tracker server
- internet users with pc's containing copyright content and bit torrent client software

downloading logistics

- user visits bit torrent website
- he selects a title of a work (e.g. motion picture)
- the website sends data to the user's PC
- the PC contacts the tracker server
- tracker server sends data back to the PC
- PC makes contact with PC's of other users of the network
- pieces of the work are uploaded from these other PC's to the downloading PC

downloading logistics

conclusion:

- the works are stored on the computers of network users
- the physical act of transmitting (uploading) takes place from these computers

so who makes available?

in a technical interpretation: the users of the network

so what about the operator of the torrent site and tracker?

In a technical interpretation, the operator probably does not itself make available:

- the work is not stored on the operator's computer
- the actual transmission of the work does not go through the operator's computer

unless: the acts of transmitting the torrent file and tracker data to the user's computer (necessary to initiate the downloading process) are considered (part of) the act of making available now let's look at it from a functional perspective: who is really making the works available?

So what is Demonoid?

technically:

- website with links to torrent files
- tracker server
- no copyright content

So what is Demonoid?

functionally: a fully equipped online entertainment store offering free downloads:

- popular music
- latest movies, often pre-release
- popular TV shows
- latest video games
- audiobooks, etc.

P2P online entertainment store

perfect business model:

- cost-free supply guaranteed by offering free downloads in return for free uploads (the store engages the users as its suppliers)
- catalogue is fully tailored to the customers' needs: users upload the content they like. No risk of being left with stock nobody is interested in buying
- store may use download statistics to analyze and manipulate the content made available
- income through advertising

Is this making available to the public by the web site operator (i.e. the operator of the P2P entertainment store)?

from a technical perspective: no

from a functional perspective: yes

So who should the right holder sue?

most obvious: the operator(s) of the bit torrent website and tracker

or:

- the ISP hosting the bit torrent website and/or tracker?
- the individual users of the network?
- the ISPs providing internet access to users of the bit torrent network?

case law

courts tend to take a technical approach:

- allowing other users of the network to download from one's PC constitutes making available to the public
- uploading users directly liable for copyright infringement (e.g. Brein v. UPC, SABAM v. Tiscali)

case law

- operator of the website may be held liable as well, but:
- the question whether he is directly liable for copyright infringement is not explicitly discussed or direct liability is denied
- liability based on other theories: tort, vicarious or contributory liability, facilitation, inducement, authorization of infringement, etc. (Grokster, Universal v. Cooper, Brein v. KPN)

Indirect instead of direct liability:

does it matter?

Yes: the burden of proof for the right holder is higher

direct liability:

- evidence of making available of one single work may suffice to obtain an injunction or filtering order covering all of plaintiff's repertoire
- evidence of culpability and/or commercial intent not required in order to obtain an injunction indirect liability theories may require proof of:

- substantial and systematic availability of infringing content
- culpable behaviour
  - knowledge of and/or intention to promote large-scale sharing of infringing content;
  - commercial intentions; relationship between large-scale downloading and (advertising) income
  - no measures to avoid infringement, such as filtering, etc.

rethinking the functional interpretation:

- making available: a functional term without reference to the technique applied
- if providing the facilities does not in itself constitute a communication to the public (Agreed Statements), anything else or in access of that may
- it makes sense: the party who offers, organizes and controls the online entertainment service should be responsible for what is made available through it

P2P technology diffuses the issue. In other cases we do take a functional approach:

- I-tunes: we would consider Apple to be responsible (directly liable) regardless of whether the files purchased are actually transmitted from Apple's server or from a server operated by a third party
- Amazon: responsible even though the books and CD's purchased are actually owned and shipped by a third party.

So what happened to Demonoid?

- used to be hosted in the Netherlands
- Dutch anti piracy organization BREIN sued the hosting ISP offering evidence of substantial infringement and culpability
- Demonoid moved to a Canadian ISP before the case went to court
- after threat of legal action Demonoid now says it has to block Canadian traffic and has set up server elsewhere. Still online..
